TSIKOUDIA

Tsikoudia, also known as Raki is a grape-based pomace brandy from the Greek island of Crete.

It's made by distilling the remnants of grapes pressed in winemaking, similar to grappa. The pomace ferments for about 6 weeks in a tightly sealed barrel, and is then distilled into a crystal clear drink. It can contain anywhere between 40-65% alcohol.

Tsikoudia is a common dinner digestif and in most tavernas in Crete is offered as a complimentary digestif with fruit and sweets after the meal.

It can be flavoured using lemon rind, rosemary, or honey, and is sometimes served cold from a bottle kept in the freezer.
